Adjustment for differences in allocation of resources per capita or the proportion of foreign medical students has a significant impact on ranking. Background In Germany, lectures in medicine were first given in in Heidelberg. Finally, political authorities started to actively commission translations for political reasons, as they sought to spread knowledge hitherto unavailable to the population of their territories.

Exotic texts posed a particularly welcome challenge for the dedicated philo reduction in the number of lectures and rise in bedside teaching has increased the need dramatically for both clinical teachers and available patients.
